- Water container
Details: bigger is better. I use a kid's plastic bucket.
- Rag / Cloth
Details: Sometimes I use old clothes, towels and bed sheets.
- Tissue
Detail: Don't skimp on the tissue because it's super useful for wiping out mistakes quickly, cleaning the edges of your paper and to wipe your hands when you get globs of paint on them or on your brush handles - it happens.
- Table cover
Detail: I made a permanent mark in the kitchen table which even went green because I used no cover. Watercolor is easy to wipe up but if you keep your materials out all the time like I do or use the same work surface then it could be getting wet a lot and over time it might damage the surface.
- Spray bottle
Detail: At first I wanted to say optional but fun. But really it is essential. For instance, if you are in a super dry climate or room then you will need to spray above your work to keep it workable. If the paint on your paper gets too dry then you can't continue working on it because you will get those unwanted marks that we call cauliflowers.

PS If there are any mistakes here (and there is a high probability that there are then please let me know).
